Classical

Classicism is a style manifested itself in all the arts of Europe in 17-19 centuries: art, literature, music, architecture. Restraint, symmetry, sophistication and appeal to antiquity are reflected in the Classic Design. Classic style showcases a noble decoration, materials of exceptional quality. This kind of style looks attractive by their serene colours and atmosphere of reliability and imperial dignity. It has become an obvious choice for the people with settled taste preferences, as well as those who prefer the age-old cultural values ??and traditions instead of fleeting fashion.

“When your love for vintage elements and royal taste is fused in a furniture it creates a symmetric & sophisticated design that reflects the culture & traditions in a preferred age old style”

Modern

"Modern design" refers to the specific time period between the early to mid-twentieth century. This was the peak of art and design inspired by Scandinavian and German Bauhaus design, creating a distinct style focused on simple form and function. Modern designs aim to be focused on using clean, often angular and smooth lines and contemporary features. The minimalistic appreciation with these designs is also becoming quite popular. This design style is focused on the removal of clutter, celebrating a more open feel which welcomes a lot of natural light and sparse surfaces.

"When the inspiration of modern design is fused in a furniture, it reflects a distinct style that becomes the core design of all furniture."

Contemporary

"Contemporary design" doesn't refer to a specific period of time, it is constantly changing to reflect the popular styles of present day design and the future. It borrows qualities from modernism, minimalism, and other global styles, without hyper-focusing on any one in particular. It showcases the design that is curated at this very moment in time, making it innovative and forward looking.

"When different styles and design inspiration are used to create a furniture it showcases an amalgamation of various textures and design coming together to create unique brilliance."

Fusion - Contemporary and Modern

Contemporary style encompasses a range of styles developed in the latter half of the 20th century. Design radiates softened and rounded lines blended with stark lines seen in modern design to create a design extravaganza.

When two great design eras come together it creates a furniture using neutral elements and bold colors that adds a special character to the living space.
